Cranford, New Jersey

Cranford is a residential town that was largely developed from the 1880s to 1930s as a suburban community along the Central Railroad of New Jersey and Rahway River. At one time the township was known as the "Venice of New Jersey." Cranford has nearly 400 acres of county and municipal parks and open space, and an extensive recreation program with a community center, ball fields, tennis courts, etc. Though primarily a residential town, Cranford has a vibrant downtown with many business services, boutiques, and restaurants.
