Garwood, New Jersey

Garwood was created as an industrial town at the turn of the century. In the 1890's a large piece of land was acquired by John Maxwell, the former president of the Central Railroad of NJ. He was responsible for forming the "Garwood Land and Improvement Company" which was designed to attract industry to the area and provided housing to workers. Incorporated in 1903, the town was named for Samuel Garwood, president of the Land Company. The area that is now Garwood borders Westfield and Cranford. After World War II, Garwood expanded from being a town with factory related development to regular suburban housing. The downtown offers a variety of stores and commercial businesses.
